Gustave Doré was born in Strasbourg in 1832, the son of an engineer. His remarkable talent for drawing became plain when he was a boy, and he was only fifteen when the editor of the Paris Le Charivari gave him full-time employment as a caricaturist.

He was firmly established as an illustrator—and much travelled—when at the age of twenty-nine he published his engravings for Dante's Inferno. They made him famous and are regarded by some as his finest work; but this was just the beginning of international celebrity. He was only fifty-one when he died, but there is about his work a timeless quality that gives it a powerful and enduring appeal.

This book, adapted from a two-volume edition published in 1870, offers a selection of his illustrations for Dante's Divine Comedy, The Travels of Baron Munchausen, Milton's Paradise Lost, the Fables of La Fontaine, Perrault's Fairy Realm, the Bible, Chateaubriand's Atala, the Legend of Croquemitaine, and Don Quixote. Numbering 225 in all, they are accompanied by descriptive captions, while the book also contains a memoir of Gustave Doré, a critical essay, and brief introductions to the works illustrated.
